DESIGNING WITH NATURE

A grass path between lovely flowerbeds of Russian sage and allium leads the way to the future of East End landscaping...

“THIS IS THE TIME TO PLAN—MAKE A WISH LIST, SO IT CAN COME TRUE.” THE SENTIMENT IS APTLY SEASONAL, AND COMING FROM AWARD-WINNING DESIGNER FREDERICO AZEVEDO, OWNER OF UNLIMITED EARTH CARE, FILLED WITH PROMISE. WITH AN EYE TOWARD THE FUTURE AND A FOCUS ON THE POSSIBILITY OF THE NOW, HE ALREADY SEES WHAT NEXT YEAR HOLDS. “EVERYTHING SHOULD START VERY EARLY IN THE SPRING IN ORDER TO BECOME BEAUTIFUL.”

Azevedo attended Art Basel in Miami last week and has now blown back into the Hamptons on a fresh, winter breeze. In addition his home in North Haven, Azevedo keeps homes in Miami and New York City. Based on his recent travels, he shares that “Fuchsia and mustard yellow—not bright yellow, but mustard yellow—are very hot right now. We always have new things coming in” at his Unlimited Earth Care garden center on Scuttle Hole Road in Bridgehampton. As he says, “I always keep in touch with European designers.”

Brazilian-born Azevedo learned some things about the ins and outs of manicured lawns while studying landscape design in Oxford, England. As he points out, “Each environment requires its own landscaping—the design can change—but we are all limited to what will grow here. Soil conditions, sun exposure and the seasons require you to think—you can bring a concept in, but it has to be translated, an adaptation.” Right now he’s excited about incorporating “geometric pattern in landscaping in different levels. It creates dynamic interest, bringing more to designs on different levels.”

Azevedo strives to make landscaping appear as a natural and complementary extension of the fine and varied architecture of the East End. Of course, much like the aesthetic at work in his popular store, his systematic approach to design must look effortless.

He envisions a “change to a more sustainable approach—meadows with native plants to attract wildlife and propagate native species” across the East End. He and his team recently divided a client’s lawn into six masses of a mix of native and non-native flowers between swaths of native switch grass, following this pattern to the end of the property.
